BELO HORIZONTE
One of the most historic venues in Brazilian football and called home by Atletico Mineiro and Cruzeiro, the 57,483 capacity Estadio Mineirão has undergone a complete overhaul prior to hosting six matches including one semi-final.

CURITIBA
Ever since renovation works were completed in June 1999, the historic Estadio Joao Gama - better known as the Arena da Baixada - has been considered one of Brazil's most modern and best-appointed stadiums, with a capacity of 40,000.

PORTO ALEGRE

NATAL
Rising up on the site is the Estadio das Dunas stadium project, with its name relating to the sand dunes that are one of the most impressive natural attractions in the Natal region.

PORTO ALEGRE
The main feature of the project is the installation of an innovative metal roof to cover the stands, ramps and turnstile area. The idea being to enable its continued use during its refurbishment, at the end of which the Beira-Rio will have a capacity of 50,287.

RECIFE
With room for 42,849 spectators and constructed by means of a partnership between the public and private sectors, the Arena Pernambuco now hosts Nautico's games - following the agreement reached with the club in October 2011.

RIO DE JANEIRO
Once the largest stadium in the world, packing in crowds of up to 200,000, the Maracanã now has a reduced capacity of 73,311 for Brazil 2014. It remains, nevertheless, the country's biggest football ground.

SALVADOR
Maintaining the proud tradition of the Forte Nova, the new stadium will host four group matches, three of them featuring top-seeded teams, as well as a Round-of-16 match and a quarter-final tie. Overall capacity 48,747 visitors.

SAO PAULO
The Arena de Sao Paulo has been chosen to host the Opening Match of Brazil 2014 and will also welcome five other encounters, including one semi-final. A total of close to 6,000 people were employed for the construction process.
